Dear Song,

I can't thank you enough for your generous pledge of $10,000 in support of IFAW scholars in Kenya — specifically those at the university level studying wildlife-related subjects. What a fitting tribute to Mike and a high-impact way to continue his legacy.

Currently three IFAW/OOGR scholars are enrolled in veterinary medicine or animal health programs, and two are pursuing wildlife management diplomas. Our team in Kenya will continue to look out for talented students eager to embark on university-level studies in conservation and/or wildlife management. Ensuring that wildlife and people can safely coexist is such an essential component of our approach; these scholarships are a key to the future and to preparing the next generation of conservation leaders.

Your gift, coming at this juncture, is a tremendous sign of optimism — which we at IFAW share! Please know how much your support is appreciated as the students anticipate returning to their studies, both remotely and in person, as soon as it is safe to do so. Thanks again to you and your trustees for supporting the young people of Kenya in their aspirations to help people and animals thrive together.

Gratefully,
